IN THE CITY-A CHRISTMAS JINGLE. "Well, Master Jack and tiny Bess, You've come in town to-day, I guess, To see the sights and look about; And, as I'm dressed, I'll take you out. Come, hurry up, no time to stand ; I'm ready now, each give a hand; The day is short, so much to see, I fear we won't get back for tea. We'll walk on Chestnut street awhile And see the shops, and time beguile; And if you have some pennies bright We'll buy a picture book and kite." "No, auntie, that won't do for me; I'se got some money here, you see, Pinned in my pocket all so tight, But I won't spend it for a kite: I want some nicer things than that ! And Bessie wants a pussy cat. I guess we'll find some shop around Where plenty pretty things are found.". "Well, s'pose we try in this big store (I think you've not been here before); Just open up your peepers wide, And look about on every side, Don't be afraid, we'll push our way ; Just such a crowd conces every day.' "Oh, auntic, see," says little Bess, "Somebody's tored my Sunday jess." "Is this the Sunday dress you wear? There isn't much of it to tear. Al, well! your striped stockings blue Are long enough to cover you. Your grandma says (she's little queer), he wonders all the children here Don't have the croup and other woes-They wear such dreadfluly short clothes She doesn't like at all to see The stockings way above the knee, And then the little bandy legs Hang out below like wooden pegs. But Madam Fashion rules the day, And she must always have her way ; For worse than any croup or gout Is Madam Fashion in a pout," .

"Suppose we go below the stairs, And see what kind of wares: Are there for sale-why, lots of toys: The very thing for girls and boys!" "Oh, auntic, auntic, come right here, A music-box for papa, dear." "Oh, Jack! you'd better buy a cow; He has two music-boxes now." "How many pennics does it cost To buy a knife (for mine is lost)? A jumping-jack, Oh. Bessie, see! That's just what mamma says to me. An omnibus, and horses six. And driver putting on the licks. Hurran for sleds, I see a lot, I wish I knew just what they'd got " Well, as they say sit down a bit. I fear you'll have a nervous fit. It isn't late, we've plenty time, So I will tell you all in rhyme." " Oh, auntie, do, 'twill be such fun, And I won't wink till you are done. Attention, Bessie, still as mice, We're going to hear it awful nice."

" Now to begin: Drums, trumpets and balls Tea acts and tables and coaches and dolls, Velocipedes, elephants, steamboats and drays, Battles and marbles and pop-guns and -leighs-

Everything needful you'll and in the store; Hunting the city you wouldn't get more. So out with your purse, I hope full and strong The clerks are so basy they cannot wait long Pick out your toys and they'll make up pack.

Just like old Santa Claus has on his back, They send it right home before you are out, And now, go up stairs, you're hungry, I see, We'll have some bread and butter and tea. Then in the parlor I'll tell little Bess, Some day we shall come for a fine wedding dress. Fixings and outlit-the French say trousseau But English is probably better for you-There is everything here that a lady can put On the crown of her head for the sole of he Or wrap round her shoulders or fit round her waist.

Or that can be stitched on or pinned on or laced. Or fied on with a string or stuck on with :

In front or behind, above or below. But maybe I'm wrong in part of my tale, I never saw bangs or frizzes for sale, Perfumery, powder and soap you will find, Brushes and combs, very good of their kind; Bed-teads and bureaus and sofas and chairs, Carpets and curtains (you find them up stairs) Easels and pictures and brackets and books, Glasses and hat racks to hang up on hooks: Hardware and tinware and plenty of brass, Cook stoves for oil and heaters for gas; And down in the centre a counter that's round Behind which is everything else to be found. In worsteds and tidies and fringes and bead-And baskets and patterns, whatever one needs.

Vases and clocks and ornaments tall, To put in the parlor or stand in the hall : Table cloths, napkins and blankets and quitts Festooned upon arches or hung upon stifts, Papers and envelopes, postals and stamps, Candle sticks, ice pitchers, goblets and lamps, Waiters and dishes for cream and for fish, And everything else you can ask for or wish China and silver and griddles and pots, And, likely as not, some houses and lots !" Oh, auntic, I know that's a whopper you

They couldn't have houses and lots here to

"Well, may be not, come help me look ! I'll buy for you a picture book, And Bessie, darling, don't you fall And break that beautiful was doll," "Oh auntic, something very queer-You see that lady over here? Well, when you turn your head about She hid your money up the spout," " Why that's all right, you little goose ! Those tubes are for that very use," " But, auntie, that's a water-spout! How will they get the boxes out ?" "When you grow big I'll tell you how " I'm big enough to know it now." " Well, then, those little boxes there Are carried up by means of air, Asboats and ships by wind and tide on river and on occan ride. Pneumatic tubes, quite hard to spell, But by-and-bye you'll do it well." "I don't believe they do, for fair, Sail all their money in the air ! I know Aunt Kate and Uncle Frank I'ut all their money in a bank." "Oh yes, they're such a stingy pair They'll always keep their money there: And hang upon the chimney jam A stocking small for little Sam, And staff it full with nuts and cake-(I know the kind your auntic makes). Far better, if in town to-day With horse and buggy, cart and dray. Investing some few hoarded dimes, in buying gifts for Christmas times. But here's papa; he's come, I guess To take us home. Come Jack and Bess." "And I must tell the boys I meet, In Philadelphia, Chestnut street, They'll find the ulcest, biggest store, They ever, ever saw before: I'm going to tell them all about That thing I called a water-spout l'neumatic tubes, I don't forget; I'll say it all the time, you bet! And I shall get our paper man To put it all in if he can.

Shot it Down His Throat. aware senator of the times of Jefferson n, and the grandfather of the present Delaware senator. In the heat of discussion between Bayard and a distinguished public man, offensive epithets were exchanged. A challenge to a duel followed, and was accepted. The parties went to the ground. Officers of the law appeared on the spot to arrest them. As the seconds were parleying with the officers the principals fled on horseback along the same road. Passing a saw mill in an ob-scure place, Bayard shouted to his antagonist to stop and settle the quarrel then

and there. They descended to the pit of the saw mill, measured the distance for themselves, tossed up a copper for the word, took their places, and at the first fire Bayard shot his autagonist right in the mouth, thus literally driving his offensive epithets down his throat.

Literature and Politics.

A Senior Oration by E. D. Wingeroth, Class of 1881, F. & M. College, Modern civilization, as generally considered, is an outgrowth of intellectual development. The mind, capable of receiving and retaining the most delicate im pressions, obtains its nourishment from every material element of the universe. Every form of being or existence, whether pleasing or repulsive, when brought into contact with any of the senses, becomes an influence in moulding and forming the character of an individual. Deriving thus its nutriment from such an infinite variety of sources, the mind itself becomes a plastic power, creates new images, new chan nels of thought, and finds expression, according to its nature, in the various arts and sciences.

We will consider but one of these, Literature, and its influence on the state. By literature we understand the expression of an individual's or a nation's ideas in writing. It exists in many different forms—in dramas, epies, elegies, songs and ballads, in tales of romance and chivalry, in history, philosophy, and in all other forms of word-composition. Comparatively few persons in ancient times were permitted to enjoy its benefits. The art of printing was then unknown, and for the masses literature existed only in imperfect native songs and ballads, orally transmitted from generation to generation. But the invention of the printing press created a new life for literature. It brought on a grander, a sublimer revolution than was ever enacted on the battle fields of a nation. It rescued from perpetual darkness the rich treasures of the ancient classics and revived the languages in which Plato philosophized, Homer and Virgil sang, and in which Xenophon, Livy and Casar recorded the events of past ages. Literature assumed a distinct form. Books, magazines, pamphlets and newspapers were in time printed and read; and civilized nations gradually discovered their influence by an intellectual and moral progress which freed them, to a great extent, from the ignorance and superstition of preceding generations. Religion, also, spread its influence, and the Bible, instead of being chained to the sacred altar for preservation, became a general household treasure.

Literature is not confined to any partie ular state or nation; it is a common possession, varying according to the genius of the writers. All the European nations have their literary representatives, vary ing from the mere scribe to the " myriad minded" Shakspeare; while our own Arcadia, already immortalized in song and story, still cries out, " Excelslor.' The influence of literary productions on politics, or the administration of public affairs, has always been recognized as of the utmost importance. Soldiers, statesmen and politicians, drink deep at its he thful fountains. In time of public calamity or distress, some tiny song or poem, breathing the sentiments of an anxious people, will arouse the drooping spirits of a land and carry it on to peace and victory. "The man who writes the songs of a nation need not care who makes its laws." In the French revolution the pen was mightier than the sword; for the Marseilles, sung by enraptured thousands, fired the souls of the beleaguered hosts and bore them in the battles din to exalted deeds of heroism. The sweet songs of a Heine, a Moore or a Burns, expressing the tenderer emotions of the heart, the patriotic zeal of the statesman, or the quiet musings of the fireside, ennoble the masses and elevate them to a higher, a purer and a nobler manhood. Who can estimate the influence a Paine's "Com mon Sense" had in rescuing our own land from British thraldom? or that of an "Uncle Tom's Cabin," so indissolubly connected with the emancipation of the Southern slave? From the Norman troubadours who humored and delighted the court of England, up to the present time, literature has been an indispensable factor in the existence and government of nations. It will permeate every individual within its course. Its spirit cannot be hemmed in by any form of jurisprudence. Its subtle power, which is mightier than the sceptre of a king, can determine the destiny of nations. Whatever political dissatisfactions may exist in our country, the reconciliation should be entrusted to the healing influence of literature. The blue and the gray should be forgotten; and when we decorate the graves of our battle-slain, we should strew the roses on the soldier, not

"These in the robings of glory, Those in the gloom of deteat." Then a solid North would greet a solid South; the Republican and the Democrat would unite in aspiring to make their country the noblest criterion of national Wicked for Clergymen, "I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for elergymen or other publicmen to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffscalled medicines, but when a really meritorious article is made up of common valuable remedies known to all, and that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should findly common the reference of the common in the restriction.

"I Am All Played Out" is a common complaint. If you feel so, get a package of Kidney-Wort and take it and you will at once feel its tonic power. It renews the healthy action of the kidneys, bowels and liver, and thus restores the natural life and strength to the weary body. It can now be had in either dry or liquid form, and in either way is always prompt and efficient.—New Bedford Blandard, d29-1wd&w
